Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories: http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

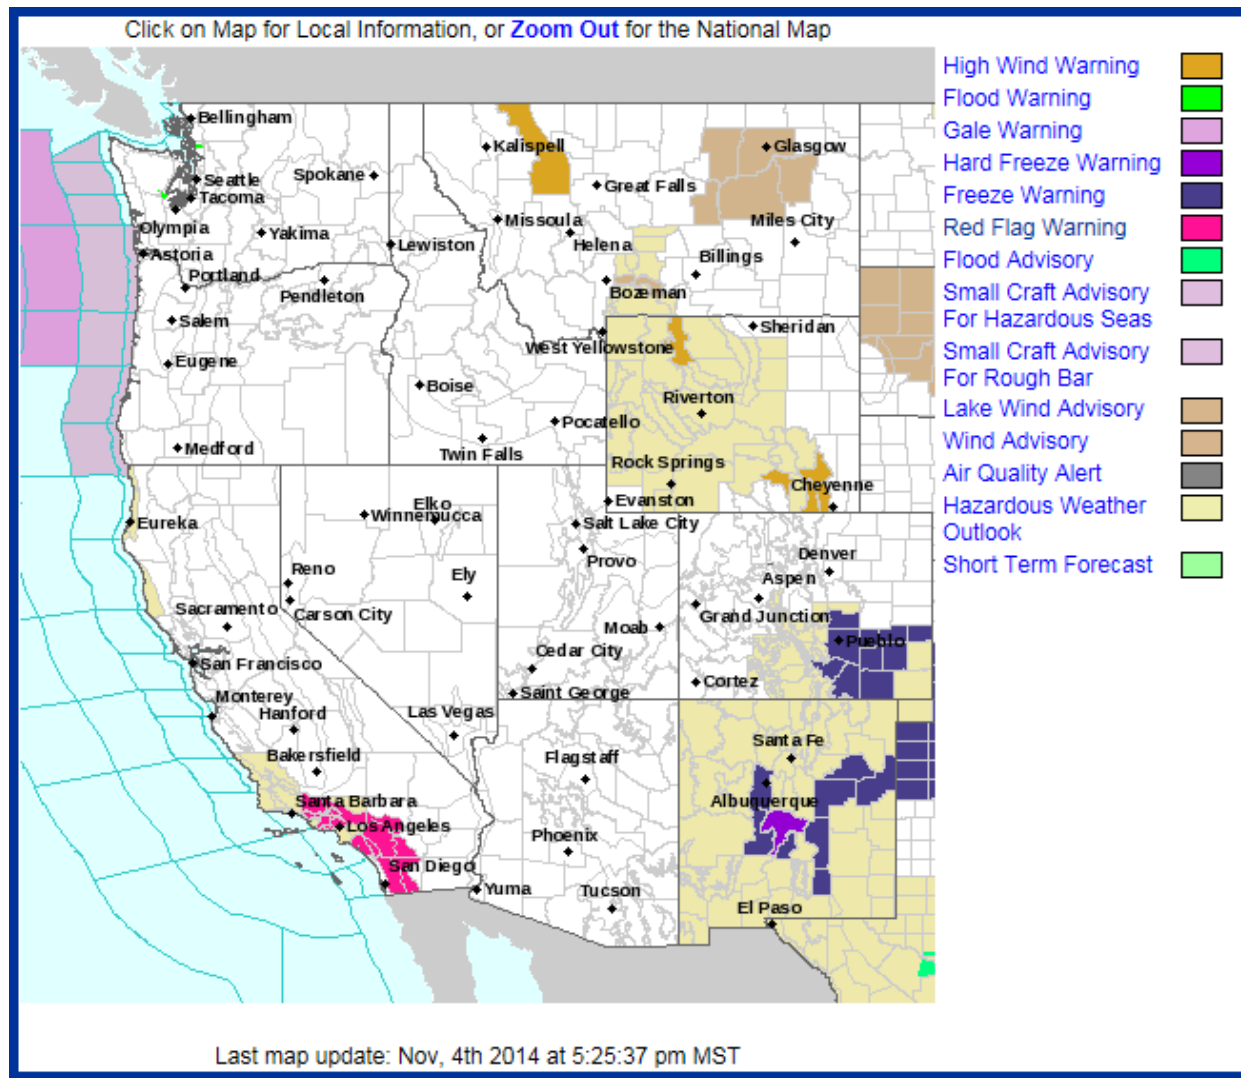

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Although a relatively strong high pressure ridge will dominate the overall weather pattern for the next week, there will be a couple of minor weather systems passing through it. The first one of those systems will move through today, and the next one will pass by Thursday. Both of these systems will bring some light precipitation to the very northwest portion of the California with variable cloudiness to areas further inland, especially in the north. The high will strengthen some over the weekend to bring temperatures up to around 10 degrees above seasonal norms for the warmer inland areas. Some relatively light north to east winds will develop as the high strengthens and likely to cause some poor relative humidity recovery to the usual areas favored by north to east winds. Aside from that wind event, there will be local areas with only moderate overnight relative humidity recovery (37-50%) through the 7 day period, mostly in the mid and higher elevations. The high pressure ridge appears likely to weaken early next week as a stronger Pacific weather system approaches the coast. Confidence is beginning to increase that more precipitation will arrive the middle of next week for most of the northern California as that system moves ashore.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A strong area of surface high pressure over the Great Basin will generate east and northeasterly winds through much of the week. Today, local offshore winds of 10-20 mph with gusts to 30 mph can be expected this morning, especially areas in and below the Cajon Pass. Temperatures today will be 5-10 degrees warmer than yesterday and most lower elevations of southern California west of the mountains will see readings in the 80s this afternoon. The surface pressure gradient is expected to increase late tonight, which will cause winds to increase into the 20-30 mph range with some gusts to 45 mph for much of Wednesday. The gusty winds will be fairly widespread and are expected to extend from Los Angeles County through the Inland Empire southward to San Diego County. The winds will abate somewhat Wednesday afternoon, but some light offshore flow can be expected through the end of the workweek. Temperatures likely to surpass the 90 degree mark over many valley and lower foothill locations Wednesday and Thursday. Minimum relative humidity will drop into the single digits each day this week with very poor recovery during the overnight hours. Another surge of offshore winds may occur Saturday night into Sunday. Temperatures are expected to remain well above normal through the weekend with no rain expected during the next 7 to 10 days.
